Editorial

Preparing for the Next Decade of Open Access Publishing

Mei-Ling Chen[1,*]

[1] Department of Surgery, Lumina University Hospital, Example City, Exampleland

This issue closes the twelfth volume of the Lumina Journal of Clinical Medicine. Over the past year we received more submissions than ever before, and our reviewers returned decisions faster than in any previous volume.[1]

Open access has changed how clinicians read and share research.[2,3] In the coming decade we will publish all articles as structured XML, provide richer figures and supplementary videos, and keep our pages free of advertising and tracking. We thank every author, reviewer and reader who has contributed to the journal.

References

1. Fischer A, Walker B, et al. Peer review turnaround in clinical journals — study 1. Sample J Med. 2022;39:162-172. doi:10.5555/sjm.2022.342
2. Lin A, Fischer B, et al. Open access and clinical practice — study 2. Sample J Med. 2020;12:375-383. doi:10.5555/sjm.2020.508
3. Huang A, Novak B, et al. Reading habits of hospital physicians — study 3. Sample J Med. 2018;9:11-17. doi:10.5555/sjm.2018.658